A TERRIBLE STEAMBOAT DISASTER .has occurred within our remembrance, was that which happened Tuesday evening last, about fifty miles below St. Louis on the Mississippi river, when the steamer Stonewall, with about 250 persons on board took fire and burned with fearful rapidity, owing to a large quantity of hay that was on board becoming ignited, so that it was impossible to save the boat. It was immediately run upon a sand bar where the water course, and of the 250 passengers and deck hands but about thirty are positively known to be saved, so it is altogether probtion lie in the fact that men are radically deprayed, and that their deprayity is more or went to a watery grave.
